A stable spirochete surface molecule carrying the OMP-1 antigen was reported by this laboratory to mediate opsonophagocytic killing. We wish to investigate the structure of this molecule, OMP-1, and determine its roles in the natural parasitica cycle. The goal of this proposal is to identify and characterize the genes involved in OMP-1 production, to determine the cellular site of synthesis of OMP-1, and to identify and characterize OMP-1 antigenic proteins that make up the antigenic epitopes. The four specific aims will address the following questions: 1) What role does OMP-1 play in the pathogenesis of Borrelia burgdorferi? This aim will use OMP-1 deficient mutant organisms to confirm the essential function of OMP-1 for spirochete survival in vivo by demonstrating the inability of the organisms to produce morbidity in animals. This aim will then investigate the functions of OMP-1 in the pathogenesis of Borrelia burgdorferi
