Field of the Invention The invention generally relates to a computer interface, and more particularly to an interface for a scanning light source. 2. Description of Related Art It is well known that a high-resolution color scanner is used to input image data into a personal computer (PC) so that the image data can be used by the PC for display or for other purposes. Generally, a scanning module of a high-resolution color scanner includes a light source and a plurality of optical components for scanning a surface of a medium to form a latent image of the medium. Generally, an illumination and optical system of a color scanning module is located outside of the scanner body and a scanning light source is positioned inside the scanner body. Accordingly, the scanner must have a relatively large size so that the illumination and optical system of the color scanning module is able to be moved in a relatively large distance, thereby increasing the overall size of the scanner.Prosthetic graft infection. Prosthetic vascular graft infections can result in limb loss. In the last 10 years, the incidence of primary septic prosthetic graft infection has increased from 1.7% to 11.5%, and its mortality rate has decreased from 66.7% to 53.8%. A thorough understanding of a patient's infection risk factors, location, and infection characteristics is essential to the appropriate care
